U.S. Plans Improvements For Bases in Philippines

After that, Mr. Armitage said, "We are looking seriously at alternatives." The potential loss of the 83-year-old bases, and their potential conversion into Soviet facilities, is particularly worrisome to the Pentagon because of the large Soviet naval presence at Cam Ranh Bay in Vietnam, once a major U.S.

One alternative under consideration, Mr. Armitage said, is Guam, which lies 1,500 miles (2,400 kilometers) east of the Philippines. Another option is Tinian, an island in the northern Marianas, where the United States has already leased more than 18,000 acres (7,200 bect-

Angry Diplomat Demands Justice For Hijackers

The Associated Press WASHINGTON - The U.S. Ambassador to Egypt, Nicholas A. Veliotes, abandoned diplomatic niceties when he boarded the Achille Lauro to confirm that an American passenger had been killed.

The ambassador went to the ship Wednesday to determine the fate of the Americans who had been held hostage. He learned that Leon Klinghoffer had been killed. Using the ship radio to speak to the U.S. Em-bassy, Mr. Veliotes roared:

"I want you to do two things: In my name, I want you to call the foreign minister, tell him what we've learned, tell him the circumstances, tell him that in view of this and the fact that we. and presumably they didn't, have those facts, we insist that they prosecute those sons of bitches."

The second thing I want you to pick up the phone and call Washington and tell them what we've done. And, if they want to follow it up, that's

However, the official, David Kimche, a former intelligence officer, was unable to provide specific substantiation for his assertion. He said that Israel had information before the hijacking that Mr. Arafat's mainstream el-Fatah wing of the PLO had made plans to launch terrorist operations at Israeli ports. Mr. Arafat has denied any involvement.

When pressed for evidence to support his charges, Mr. Kimche replied that the PLO chairman had sent Mohammed Abbas, the leader of a pro-Fatah wing of the Palestine Liberation Front, to Port Said, Egypt, to negotiate with the hijackers. The hijacker had identified themselves as members of the Palestine Liberation Front.

One of the negotiators, identified as Abu Khalid and characterized as a senior front official, is Mr. Abbas, Mr. Kimche said, a fact that has not been hidden by Mr. Arafat. Mr. Abbas is also known as Abu Abbas, abu being an Arabic term for "father of." "In our files we have a file on

UNESCO Debates Fate of Americans

SOFIA (NYT) - The second day of the UNESCO general conference here was dominated by a Soviet-led effort to dismiss American nationals working for the organization. The United States withdrew from the organization last year.

The Soviet effort, supported by Algeria, India and Cameroon, could also lead to the closing of the observer mission that the United States still keeps at UNESCO and to a decision to prosecute the United States before the International Court of Justice for nonpayment of its share of

By Jon Nordheimer
New York Times Service PONCE, Puerto Rico - Health officials worried about the spread of disease have asked the government to consider sealing the floor of a valley where a landslide buried hundreds of victims.

The slide devastated the hillside hantytown of Mameyes north of here Monday, leaving its residents under tons of mud and rubble. . Health officials, fearing that the bodies cannot be recovered quickly, would like the valley to become a mass grave.

"It is one of the most difficult and delicate decisions that the Puerto Rican government has ever been asked to make," said Mayor José Dapena Thompson of Ponce, a city of 250,000 people on the island's southern coast. Congress Secretly Votes Another $300 Million in Aid for Afghan Rebels

By Joanne Omang

has secretly approved another $300 million in military aid for anti-Soviet rebels in Afghanistan over the next two years, according to sources in the intelligence commu-

The funding, approved late last month after several weeks of heated debate in the House and Senate intelligence committees, is in addition to secret funds already appropriated for fiscal 1986 and 1987. It is expected to be used primarily for ammunition and small weapons, but part of it may be spent on a system to battle Soviet helicopters. The new funding is a major in-crease from the reported fiscal 1985 total of about $250 million, which at the time was reported to make up the bulk of the CIA's fund for covert operations worldwide. The additional spending has prompted concern among Democrats on intelligence committees in the House and the Senate over the scope and direction of U.S. aid to the rebels in Afghanistan, the

China's official Xinhua press agency said a week later that the prime minister's action had "pandered" to Japanese who wanted to deny their country's guilt for World War II. Last month, students marched through Tienanmen Square in Beijing, chanting "Down with Nakasone" and other anti-Japanese slogans in one of the biggest protest demonstrations there

Japanese newspapers reported Wednesday that Mr. Nakasone hoped to avoid prolonging the controversy by calling off another visit to Yasukuni scheduled for next week. His intention was said to have been relayed Tuesday night to members of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party by Takao Fujin-ami, the chief cabinet secretary and main government spokesman.

The party members reportedly objected strongly to the decision. According to Japanese newspapers, they contended that the prime min-ister should act consistently and complained that Japan was giving an impression of succumbing to Chinese pressure.

The Yasukuni Shrine, near the Imperial Palace grounds, honors nearly 2.5 million Japanese soldiers who gave their lives in the last century. Among those honored there, however, are convicted war criminals like Japan's wartime prime minister, Hideki Tojo. In the current political debate, officials who go to Yasukuni tend to find themselves accused as militarists by anti-government critics. For years, governing-party poli-ticians sought to deflect such charges by insisting that their visits were made as private citizens. But Mr. Nakasone, an ardent nationalist, fueled the dispute on the Aug. 15 anniversary by becoming the first postwar prime minister to "The hijackers made all the British and American civilians lie down, among whom was Leon Klinghoffer," Mr. Miglinolo was quoted as saying. "The hijackers pushed him onto his wheelchair and dragged it to the side of the boat where, in cold blood, they shot him in the face.

He was referring to an Austrian woman who had gone into hiding on the ship and was found Thursday morning. Brown Boveri advance frontiers with the three-phase a.c. propulsion technique in locomotives and motor-coaches for the State Railways of Denmark and Norway.

Flexibility

The Brown Boveri three phase a.c. propulsion technique is flexible because it allows the same locomotive type to be used for heavy goods trains and fast passenger trains. It is a technology of proven performance, whether in heavily dustladen industrial air or the severe conditions beyond the Arctic Circle.

A technology for the future that led Danish State Railways (DSB) and Norwegian State Railways (NSB) to choose Brown Boveri (BBC).

While still taking delivery of 37 dieselelectric locomotives with the threephase a.c. propulsion system, the DSB commissioned BBC to develop and build an initial batch of 10 allelectric locos employing the same technique. So begins the electrification of Denmark's rail network.

Present production by the German/ Swiss consortium of suppliers will increasingly be transferred to Danish manufacturers under licence.

Already in service with Norway's NSB are six electric and five diesel-electric locomotives incorporating the BBC three-phase a.c. propulsion technique. And 15 diesel-electric motorcoach/trailer units are on order.

BBC play a vital role in providing the world with facilities for generating, distributing and utilizing electricity. Dr. Baker, Do as You Say Dipping generously into other people's pockets, Treasury Secretary James Baker has the huge debt of the developing nations.

Until Mr. Baker took charge, the Reagan administration talked as if the crippling debt burden - well over $400 billion - was strictly a matter between debtor nations and their private bankers. It seemed to ignore the threat to financial stability if one or more of the big debtors defaulted or broke under the strain of austere loan conditions. Observing only spotty improvement in the last three years and the prospect that things could well turn worse again. Mr. Baker is now pressing for greater efforts by the banks, international lending institutions and the debtors themselves.

The secretary laid out a three-part program at the Seoul meeting of the International Mon-etary Fund and World Bank: "First and foremost," comprehensive economic planning and restructuring by debtor countries. Second. more lending and more policy direction by the World Bank and regional development banks. Third, more loans by private banks.

Mr. Baker may underestimate the depth of the problem when he urges commercial banks to extend $20 billion of new credits in the next three years. He surely overestimates the banks' enthusiasm for venturing deeper into the swamp. He hints that the U.S. government might make a further contribution, but he promises nothing. He offers no hope at all for major reductions in America's budget deficit, which badly strains the world's economy by holding up the dollar's value and interest rates.

Still, it is progress to find the Reagan administration no longer pretending that the mount-ing debt crisis does not threaten vital American interests. The secretary proposes to involve the United States in the politics of other nations, both donors and debtors, and in the policies of private banks and multinational aid agencies. Ahead of him lies much pulling and hauling over who is to do what when.

Because of America's budget deficit and congressional fatigue with foreign aid, the administration hopes new money can come from somewhere else. Recognizing that the IMF itself had a deficit for the first time last year, Mr. Baker looks for more aid from the World Bank, the Inter-American Bank and other regional institutions and from private commercial banks. But he insists that the borrowers should devise additional serious reforms. America's awakening should not be mistaken for a free lunch for overeaters.

Mr. Baker cautioned all creditor nations: "Sound policies and sustained, low-inflation growth in the industrial countries must provide the essential foundation for a successful debt strategy." Back in Washington now, the Treasury chief needs finally to articulate a sound budget policy for the industrial country that most flagrantly violates his prescription.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Washington — The hoopla and high protocol surrounding the current session of the General Assembly cannot obscure the fact that the United Nations at 40 is increasingly on trial in the United States. UN-bashing in Congress has become as prevalent as U.S.-bashing in the United Nations, and both sides need to look for confidence-building measures to halt the trend.

One such opportunity is at hand this fall — the changing of the guard at one of the world body's most im-portant agencies, the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees. Few actions will more clearly signal whether the United Nations is pursuing business as usual or heeding constructive suggestions for reform in its key humanitarian agencies.

The global refugee crisis never ends. Often it seems to move from one calamity to another, as thousands and sometimes millions of men, women and children are forced to abandon homes and countries.

These problems are of special concern to the American people, and the United States is the hope of first resort for many refugees. But the in-dispensable link in international ef-statesman fills this gap, persuading $500 million for the current year --

By Alan K. Simpson and Edward M. Kennedy Senator Simpson, Republican of Wyoming, is chairman of the Senate

ardship and resumed life in dignity.

In the 35 years since the office was created, refugee problems have esca-lated dramatically, and there is little prospect that the challenge will ease in years to come. The high commissioner is now, more than ever before, the world community's best means for responding to the needs of the world's 10 million refugees, including three and a half million in desperate circumstances in Southwest Asia and Pakistan and millions more in Sudan and other parts of Africa. The high commissioner's job is a tough one. Refugees, by definition, have crossed an international border and are often without a government to defend their interests or guarantee their safety. Through the prestige of even heads of state to work together to protect basic human rights.

of the high commissioner are inextri-cably related. As the overwhelming human tragedies of recent times have shown, the politics and logistics of refugee relief pose some of the most daunting management problems in the world today. When the high commissioner performs both important missions well, the office gains a stature that can be used to deal with future crises and to raise funds for continuing operations.

The high commissioner has prorams in 80 countries and a budget of funded almost entirely by the voluntary contributions of United Nations members, including a one-third share from the United States. Other international, national and private chari-ties and voluntary agencies have programs that complement, and some-times complicate, the UN effort and multiply by several-fold the relief that can be directed to a crisis. Inevitably, the success of all these efforts depends on the foundation laid by the high commissioner and his

The Desert Is Scaring Europeans

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS — In the early 1980s, ungainly steel structures began to spring up in the deserts of Saudi Arabia, Kuwan and Bahrain. These "cathedrals in the desert" are giant petrochemical crackers, often built with Korean labor and American know-how. Today, to the anger of boardrooms across Europe and the United States, they are coming on-stream and making basic plastics and fertilizers from the oil and waste gases that the Arabs had previously been flaring and watching go up in smoke.

The cheap new chemicals from the Gulf represent much more than stiffer competition for the established manufacturers. They are the shape of things to come in a vast range of industries in which the world's hungry producers of basic commodities are now impatient to start making their own finished goods.

The Gulf oil states have moved downstream in order to add value to their raw materials. They have created panic and dismay among European petrochemical producers, and on-Oct. 14 a crisis meeting is to be held in Brussels to try to head off the unpleasant row that has been developing between the European Community and Arab oil producers.

Both sides see the situation as a political powder keg so talks arranged between the chairman of the Gulf Cooperation Council, Kuwaiti-Foreign Minister Sabah al-Ahmad and the president of the EC Council. of Ministers, Luxembourg's Foreign Minister Jacques Poos, will take Minister Jacques 1000, place in conditions akin to secrecy.

Tempers are already badly fraver Saudi Arabia's accusations that the EC has put up protectionist barners against its burgeoning chemical exports, and by muttered threats from the kingdom of retaliation against the $12 billion worth of European goods imported there yearly.

On the European side there are fears that unless the influx of highly competitive ethylene derivatives can be staunched, there could be an in-dustrial collapse of devastating pro-portions. The cheap Arab "building block" plastics are likely to rob the Europeans of about 10 percent of their usual markets. That, coupled with the EC companies persisting overcapacity of 15 percent, could unleash a price war and a wave of hankruptcies in a sector that is crucial to Europe's high-tech industries. It is not only the Gulf states that will be changing the balance of industrial power with their low-priced petrochemical feedstocks. Libya has a big ethylene plant coming into service next year: Canada and Indonesia are well on the way to becoming petrochemical superpowers; Mexico is embroiled in a bitter trade dispute with the U.S. fertilizer lobby.

Saudi Arabia is only two-thirds of its way through an investment program that by 1990 will have sunk $15 billion into petrochemical complexes.

Trade pattern maps now being produced by some economists project an intriguing new world in the 1990s. Europe and the United States are no longer shown as the big plastics producers, having been elbowed to the sidelines by the newcomers. Esso and Mobil helped to build the desert petrochemical complexes as joint venture partners, so the American position is rather better than that of Europe, where the industry now faces losing much of its yearly $1billion chemical exports. The prospect of having to hand over to emerging nations in such a key sector is viewed with alarm in Europe - yet the writing has been on the wall for more than 10 years. In. 1973, when OPEC's success brought to an end some 30 years of oil at $2 a barrel, it also pushed products like naphtha from $25 a ton to $200 overnight, and opened the Middle East oil countries' eyes to the importance of developing as an industrial bloc. The importance of the deal that the Europeans must eventually make with the Gulf states goes far beyond the outlook for the oil industry itself. It will set a precedent for future arrangements in other sectors. Chemicals are just the first of many advanced sectors that must, in whole or in part, eventually be transferred across to the newly industrializing nations of Southeast Asia or Latin America and to the Third World. It is not possible to prevent these transfers, nor is it desirable - as a glance at the non-OECD nations' tottering debt mountain and at the Third World's losing battle against death and disease will confirm.

So for the industrialized countries the essential policy will be to build economic relationships that promise future cooperation rather than the sort of bitter competition that their more mature industries cannot win. International Herald Tribune.

"Charlie Brown" is the answer to this

OPEC: Down but Not Out OPEC's production was less than half the 1979 level; Saudi Arabia's was barely one-fourth. But with prices still soft, the OPEC governments have decided that they cannot cut production any further. The attempts to enforce the cartel's rules have now ended.

The immediate prospect is more oil at lower prices - possibly much lower. That is where the test of the industrial countries' prudence and policy will arise. If they simply splash the oil around, reverting to bad old habits and burning whatever becomes available because it is cheap, they will soon push their consumption back up to a point at which markets are tight and control once again resides with OPEC and particularly with the Saudis. Can you guess what will happen then?

Earlier this year the U.S. Geological Survey published figures showing that the oil reserves in the Gulf region are still by far the world's largest and that the probability of finding anything remotely similar elsewhere is exceedingly low. As the years pass, with every country producing its oil at the maximum possible rates, the remaining reserves of accessible oil will increasingly be concentrated in the Middle East. OPEC has suffered a defeat this year that is severe but not necessarily final.

New Battles of Britain

Other Opinion

The Britain we know from novels, films and television serials was, for all its class divisions, a law-abiding, relatively homogeneous society. The Britain that now erupts on front pages and news shows is sharply transformed, struggling with the effects of decades of decline, including a decline of respect for its civil institutions.

Britain's riots are about race without being race riots. The black and Asian immigrant populations remain relatively small, and Britain's cities are not as strictly segregated as many of America's. Poor whites and blacks live together, despair together and riot together. The affected neighborhoods suffer at least twice as much unemployment as the nationwide average of 13 percent. Among teen-agers, who have been at the core of the latest violence, expectations for a responsible, employed adulthood are shockingly remote. The inner cities of Britain first erupted in 1981, prompting new social programs and reform of police methods. But the job programs were undermined by continued stagnation.

The extra social spending has lost ground to local budget-cutting mandated by the central government. Even the police reforms seem to be crumbling under the stress of community hostility. And some of the recent official rhetoric seemed almost calculated to incite. But Margaret Thatcher's Conservative 20vernment can also blame its predecessors, now arrayed in Labor and Social Democratic oppositions. The immigration that was properly permitted during the decolonization of the 1950s and 1960s brought imperial subjects to Britain's cities just in time to make them the main victims of industrial contraction. Mrs. Thatcher has had to cope with a generously conceived but now unaffordable welfare state.

More clearly even than four years ago, unskilled young Britons in the inner cities see themselves as left out of the government's plans for eventual economic revival. As long as they do, these outbursts of violence are likely to be repeated.

The Gorbachev Generation Seems to Be Different

PARIS — As Mikhail Gorbachev, his Paris visit completed, prepares to meet Ronald Reagan in Geneva, it is clear that the change in world goes beyond mere public relations. There is a new skill in communication and a new assurance, but a new uncertainty as well, evident on matters of human rights. For the introduction of human rights questions into the formal relations between nations, we have to thank the Helsinki final act of 1975. John J. Maresca is the one American diplomat who was part of those negotiations from start to finish, and he has just published a succinct and graceful account of what went on ("To Helskini," published by Duke University). As he writes, the novelty of the final act was that it introduced the principle that human rights questions are "a legitimate aspect of relations between states and that discussion of humanrights-related issues is therefore not a form of intervention in internal affairs."

The Soviet negotiators seem not to have fully grasped the implications of this when they signed the final act. The result has put them on the defensive ever since. They have been steadily and repeatedly challenged on human rights matters in the formal Helsinki review meetings and other international forums, in nongovernmental meetings and the press, and in meetings with Western leaders -as in Paris, where questions on human rights were the one thing that agitated Mr. Gorbachev. Even inside the Soviet Union, Helsinki Watch groups were formed and had to be suppressed in the blaze of international publicity.

The Soviet response to this challenge has

the way the Soviet government addresses the changed over the last 10 years. The old bluster and defiance about "hostile provocations" can still be heard, but Soviet officials increasingly have found it necessary to defend themselves by making reference to the Western standards that form the basis of the criticisms made of them.

When Mr. Gorbachev was interviewed by French television on the eve of his Paris visit, he evaded direct answers to human rights questions by asserting that economic and social "rights" are better defended in Russia than in the West. From lesser figures among the new generation of Russian officials, a more plaintive argument increasingly is heard, particularly from those who have worked in and know the West. These people say that national custom and tradition have to be taken into account in criticizing their country. Abstract Western notions of rights and justice, they say, cannot be arbitrarily imposed on societies with an entirely different history.

There is something in this, of course. Even if the will to reform existed in the Kremlin, one could not reasonably expect a set of Western conceptions to be taken over wholesale in a Russian society that has never known anything but autocratic government.

The argument these Russians make, however, implicitly concedes the critics' case. In the past, censorship, secrecy, prison or internal exile for dissenters were defiantly said by Communists to be essential elements in the discipline of a great revolutionary movement. Now these things are perhaps, as far from it as we used to be apologetically ascribed to the unfortunate history of a still backward country, toward which the rest of us should practice tolerance.

It is an argument only indirectly made, to be sure. It comes from the younger and more Westernized Soviet functionaries. These, however, are the people who, under Mikhail Gorbachev, are taking over leadership of the U.S.S.R. from the old men who knew the heroic age of Lenin and the dark age of Stalin. All but one or two of the old men knew only backward Russia, Bolshevism, fear, struggle. The new men know the West, liberal ideas, the way the rest of the world works. They perhaps know too much for their own good. We are apparently seeing, for the first time Soviet intelligence and diplomatic defectors who act for reasons of conscience.

The old men found legitimacy in their participation in the revolution and the ordeals that followed; in the industrial transformation of Russia, triumphant ventures into space and projection of Soviet power to the open seas and the revolutionary Third World. The Gorbachev generation are postwar men who have accomplished nothing - as yet. They have the force of Russian nationalism behind them, and it is Russian nationalism that they serve. Is there ideological conviction as well? Mr. Gorbachev, in his Paris news conference, remarked that ideological divergences should not affect interstate relations "as was the case with medieval fanatics." That is an odd thing for a Communist to say, when you think about it. We are still a long way from seeing an end to ideology in Soviet affairs, certainly. We are not,

1910: U.S.-Canada Forest Fire Rages NEW YORK - All records in the history of forest fires on the Canadian-American border have been outdone by the disastrous outbreak in Minnesota and Manitoba. The dead are estimated at between 200 and 500, while 5,000 people are homeless and 2,000 are missing. Territory a thousand square miles in extent has been swept by the flames. Some idea of the conflagration may be gained from the fact that the fire area was covered with dry moss eighteen inches deep. This was swallowed up by the flames, which swept along in masses one hundred feet high. Five towns have been destroyed and relief trains are being run through the devastated district, picking up refugees along the line. The fire is hardly likely to stop until the wind ceases or rain falls in torrents.

FROM OUR OCT. 11 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO 1935: Real Reforms in Soviet Russia? PARIS - Our correspondent in Moscow recently called attention to a series of reforms in Soviet Russia. Family life has been restored by stringent laws concerning divorce; remuneraindividual merits and capacities; and private estate is being allotted to the peasants in small but sufficient size. These reforms undoubtedly mark a movement away from the earlier Russian Socialist experiment. But it would be premature to interpret them as an evolution they seem to indicate that the present masters of Soviet Russia have scented a real danger for Russian national life in the process of killing the individual, spiritually speaking, for the

As recently as last February, in a major policy statement on terrorism. Secretary of State George Shultz said that "experience has taught us over the years that one of the best deterrents to terrorism is the certainty that swift and sure measures will be taken

Experience has taught us nothing of the sort. The United States has no stance when it has been the target of terrorism (bombings of embassies as well as the marine compound, hostages held in Beirut or Tehran), the question of where and when to retaliate has turned out to be too hard. Meanwhile, the experience of Israel has amply demonstrated that retaliation does not in fact deter. From the Israeli record, a case can be made that if anything retaliation incites. That is the loudest message from the Achille Lauro. Consider that only

Liechtenstein's Treasures in New York

by John Russell

EW YORK - The Metropolitan Museum never hesitates to think big, as we all know. Thinking big is not always such a great idea, but there are times when thinking big, thinking straight and thinking brave are one and the same thing and one of them will come about on Oct. 26, when the very large losm exhibition called "Liechtenstein: The Princely Collections" opens to the general public after weeks of members' previews.

Thinking big can sometimes be taken literally, in this context. The great late Rubens alterpiece, "The Assumption of the Virgin" may well be the largest Old Master painting ever to be brought into the Met (Before it could be got safely inside it had to be uncrated in the street. Door frames had then to be removed, and walls to be taken down.)

But in the end it is not, of course, the dimensions of the "Assumption" that count. (They are 198% inches by 138% inches—or more than 5 by 31/2 meters). It is the fact that this is Rubens's last and largest account of a subject to which he had returned again and again. It is also relevant that the "Assumption," though shown briefly in Lucerne, Switzerland, in 1948, has not been seen in public since and has recently been cleaned for the present exhibition with entirely hap-

If we add to this that the exhibition also ror-images of one another, monsters of inge-includes the monumental series of paintings multy and deprayity of whom one would find by Rubers on the three of the Rubers o by Rubens on the theme of the Roman consul and warrior Decius Mus - once again, an experience without parallel in any museum in the United States — it will be clear that this exhibition has things to offer that have never been available in this country before. Nor are they ever likely to be available again, given that neither the Lou-yre, the Prado nor the Alte Pinakothek in Munich — the only museums that are comparably strong in Rubens — is ever likely to lend on such a scale to an American muse-

It also has a lot of material that has to be learned as well as looked at. Even if you are a paid-up member of the anti-handgum lobby, you may come away from this exhibition convinced that in the right maker's hands, and quite some time ago, the sporting gun could be a thing of astonishing beanty. But you will have to work at it a little, just as you will have to work at the just as you will have to work at the just as you will have to work at the just as you will have to work at the just and the just as you will have to work at the just as you will have you will have to work at the just as you will have you will have to work at the just as you will have you in Vienna in 1676 before you identify it as what many qualified observers believe it to be — the single most important piece of German High Baroque ivory carving.

Whereas the traditional role of the tankard has always been to quench thirst and promote good will, this particular vessel has overtones of sinister and mindless brotality. Venus and Mars, so far from being comple-muity and depravity of whom one would find it hard to say which was the worse of the two.

Quite apart from conundrums such as these and many others, which call not only for close looking but for careful reading and historical cross-referral, there is the fact that the Liechtenstein collections as a whole are of a kind that does not exist in this country and was specific to a Europe that no longer

In the 1930s, the Liechtenstein collections had been fundamental to the great city of Vienna for more than 200 years. Every serious visitor wanted to get in to see them, and almost every serious visitor succeeded. In general conversation, Liechtenstein was primarily the name of a family, rather than of a tiny principality niched somewhere between the hip pocket of Switzerland and the vest pocket of Austria.

When the collections were spirited out of Austria to Vaduz, the capital of Liechtenstein, in difficult and dangerous circumstances in the last months of World War II, it was not because Vaduz was an earthly paradise but because Prince Franz Josef II, then as now the reigning prince of Liechtenstein, had taken care to ensure the neutrality of the tiny country that had belonged to his family since the early 18th century.

As European family names go, not many were grander. Liechtensteins had been people of consequence in central Europe since become the confidant and right-hand man of the Habsburg Duke Albrecht III of Austria, and since 1390, when Georg III von Liechtenstein (formerly chancellor of the University of Vienna) became Bishop of Trent, in Lombardy, which at that time was a Habsburg fief.

The family never bred another bishop, but very strong indeed in statesmen, soldiers, courtiers, technologists of weaponry and very large landowners.

Shrewd, straight and staunch, they made themselves consistently indispensable to the crowned heads of the day -not least, by the unsecured and doubtless often forgiven loans that they were ready to put up at short notice. In return, whole towns, big country houses, distant castles and vast stretches of land came their way. (As for duchies, they stuck to the Liechtensteins like burrs.) In Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia and Lower Austria they were everywhere, and they never put a foot wrong. Right up to the final dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire in 1918, they held high office at court, and right up to the end of World War II they had large holdings in Czechoslovakia, as well as in Āustria.

In the course of their multifarious activities, the Liechtensteins collected in an entirely personal and largely spontaneous way. Each generation had its own preoccupations. The words "overall planning" were never heard, and would have made no sense. It was never the family's intention that the collections should end up as a living encyclopedia of the fine arts. What they wanted, they got, and that was that.

The earliest acquisition of paintings seems to have occurred in 1568, when the marvelously evocative portrait of Ladislaus, Count of Haag, by Hans Mielich, entered the collection. And the good news is that after a period when some great paintings had to be sold, works of art are being bought again. Rubens's oil sketch for his "Mars and Rhea Silva" is a recent arrival, for instance, and so is the august and austere painting by the early 16th-century Dutch painter Herman Posthumus, called "Fantastic Landscape With Roman Ruins."

T is not for me to review the exhibition at this stage. But it may be worth saying that Dr. Reinhold Baumstark, the youthful director of the Liechtenstein collections, intended from the first to plan it as much in operatic terms as in any more conventional ones. It begins with an overture in which the main themes of the exhibition are sounded. Act I proceeds in varied and picaresque style until it ends with a festive and euphoric finale in which we turn a corner and come upon one of the most spectacular episodes in the history of human convey-

by Anna Kisselgoff

The Golden Carriage.

EW YORK - The music-television channel MTV may have promoted the idea of spliced-in, cutup, dissociated imagery to rock music fans, but such ideas are nothing new to anyone who has followed Merce Cumningham's prophetic view of discontinuity-ascontinuity in his choreography.

As rock video after rock video bombards us in bars, restaurants, department stores, beauty salons, discos, boutiques and cable-equipped living rooms, the link between life and art that Cunningham has patiently pointed out for 25 years no longer seems merely a hypothesis. What is more Cunningham, in theory, than rock videos in which nusic interacts with movement by dancers but seems unrelated to it? Or where sound invades a screen with multiple messages, where fragmentation is furthered by rapid cuts away from one image to another? In short, the dissociation behind Cunningham's dances is felt all around us. Cunningham discusses his core ideas in

"The Dancer and the Dance," a newly published book of interviews with the avantgarde dancer and choreographer by a French arts journalist, Jacqueline Lesschaeve (Marion Boyars Publishers, distributed by Scribners, $27.50). Since the fundamentals of Cunningham's thinking are found here in collected form, the book is an excellent introduction to those seriously interested in finding out more about him. For those to whom he is familiar, the interviews are a convenient restatement worked into new, detailed analyses of how his dances are com-

Cunningham's insistence on exploring dif-ferent ways of viewing dance, of giving it a nonlinear structure is, he has often declared, consistent with his premise that art can, even does, operate in the manner of life. Lesschaeve conducted these interviews in 1977 (some updating has been included), long before MTV came into vogue. Yet the techniques used in rock videos are merely an amplified version of the discontinuity Cunningham observed in ordinary television and as we switched channels, he said, we became accustomed to images and ideas with no apparent logical connection. Dance too, he stated, did not have to be composed or viewed in a traditionally ordered way.

And so MTV, so to speak, has caught up with Curringham. More to the point, Cunningham was again a pioneer as the first choreographer to begin sustained video work as an extension of his choreography. Yes, but is it art? If MTV is not (and it is not), there is certainly an aesthetic at work in Cunningham's case.

It is Lesschaeve's goal to have the choreographer explain this aesthetic in his own words. The original 1980 edition of the book was in French. This first American edition is said to go back to Cunningham's tapes in English, although there are a few lapses. Did Cunningham really say "canalize" instead of channel? In the past, he has said that he attended college for one year in Washington, D. C. — here it comes out University of Washington in Seattle. Nonetheless, there are new and valuable appendixes on the repertory by David Vaughan.

Cunningham's willingness to explain his compositional processes for specific works is highly unusual Readers unfamiliar with his use of chance devices while creating a piece might find it hard to follow him when he refers to the charts he drew up, for example, for the 1976 "Torse." Yet in discussing how he threw coins or used other chance procedures to arrive at the final spatial arrangements from these charts, to see who faced back or front at which time and so on, he stands to amaze us with the complexity be-hind it all. "Torse" was an extremely concentrated and densely rich piece of choreography - and now we know why.

If such analytical descriptions might seem dry, there is nothing dry about the dances or the man who created them. The irrepressible, unassuming Cunningham comes through here with his insistence that such procedures were merely a means for exploring new ways of moving and seeing. The result was fresh,

LONG the way, Cunningham lets us in A on his biography — a lawyer's son from Centralia, Washington, who wanted to study theater and fell into dancing with seeming inevitablity. Unfortunately, in her admiration for Cunningham's revolutionary work, Lesschaeve has a tendency to characterize others — namely Martha Gra-ham, George Balanchine, Jerome Robbins — as reactionary. They are not "modern" in But Cunningham, whose break with Graham's company in 1945 pointed him toward a more formalist aesthetic, answers his interviewer wisely. Lesschaeve, in one passage, offers an maccurate, even laughable characterization of Graham's very American art. She remarks: "Graham has been presented as modern, which I never felt the work was. What she does seems to me a mixture of classical and neoclassical style with very little added that is modern; mainly, it seems to me, the influence of German Expressionism, Mary Wigman in particular. The underlying ideas are quite impoverished and not at all Cunningham, who has rarely looked back at his Graham experience, replies with a strikingly vibrant appraisal - his first impressions of Graham, as she taught in her classes. "The sight of Graham moving strong and clear in her demonstrations of an exercise and the force with which her dancers did the movements were impressive. Her ideas as to what dancing could be about were certainly not the 19th-century ballet ones, and the movements she made at the time were not directly related to classical ballet. The weight with which she herself moved — remarkably clear in the falls she invented was absorbing to watch. It left me with a vivid sense of the power of human move-ment. Her dance vocabulary was unique, although I agree with you, the forms she used were 19th century, each work built to a climax from which it fell away." Yet Cunningham is not ready to agree with those who took off from his own principles that any kind of movement should be considered valid in dance. The Judson Dance Theater limited its own possibilities, he feels, by often using performers with no dance training. And today's younger experimentalists, he feels, ofen avoid the issue he raised early in his own independent career: namely, that dance should not depend upon music. He praises Lucinda Childs, for instance, for the "hypnotic and often beautiful effect" produced by her repetitive patterns to minimalist music. But again, a situation where dance and music "do the same," one repeating the other, suggests the 19th century much more than it does the 20th."

Does all this sound like dogma? Certainly there is none in what we see on stage. Just this month, the Pennsylvania Ballet in Philadelphia presented the world premiere of Cunningham's beautiful "Arcade" as part of the National Choreography Project. On Jan. 31, the Paris Opera Ballet will revive "Un jour ou deux" which Cunningham created for the company's dancers in 1973.

How does one square Cunningham's willingness to choreograph for ballet companies (as well as his own modern-dance troupe) with his feelings about the 19th century - a century in which the idiom of ballet dancers was refined? The truth is that training is one thing and an art form another. One suspects that Cunningham is attracted to the flexibility of ballet technique (most of his own company studies ballet). It is a technique we see Cunningham increasingly re-examining. It opens up another movement path to explore. And as he tells Lesschaeve in another context, "There are a multiplicity of routes to

by David Stevens

T IENNA — This city's musical calendar currently includes a couple of stage works in the light vein by two composers who had little more in common other than that they were Central European Jewish musicians who were swept into exile and virtual oblivion by the Nazi

One is Alexander von Zemlinsky, a highly steemed composer, conductor and pedagogue, whose comic opera "Kleider Machen Leute" enjoyed such a successful revival at the Volksoper during last spring's Vienna Festival that it has been held over in this season's repertory. The other is Paul Abraham, who had a brief but deliriously successful career as an operetta composer, and whose "Viktoria und Ihr Husar" was chosen to reopen the newly refurbished Raimund Theater last week.

Zemlinsky was a key figure in the Viennese avant-garde artistic scene from the turn of the century. As a teacher, he briefly tu-tored Arnold Schoenberg, who otherwise was an autodidact, and his sister Mathilde was Schoenberg's first wife. Another of his pupils was the beautiful Alma Schindler, and although he was by no means a handsome man, they were strongly attracted to each other until another composer-conductor en-tered the scene and married Alma — Gustav Mahler. It did not seem to affect the two men's mutual professional esteem. As a conductor, Zemlinsky was the first apellmeister at the Volksoper for most of the first decade of the century, except for one season when Mahler engaged him at the Court Opera. When Mahler quit Vienna Zemlinsky returned to the smaller bouse. In 1911, he went to the Deutsches Landestheater in Prague, one of the German-speak-ing world's leading opera houses, and stayed for 16 years, conducting a long list of out-standing productions. Stravinsky, who did not say such things lightly, held Zemlinsky in high regard as a conductor and cited a "Marriage of Figaro" under him in Prague as the most satisfying opera performance he had ever heard.

After Prague, he served for three years under Otto Klemperer at the adventurous Kroll Opera in Berlin, until extreme-rightist agitation forced it to close. He returned to Vienna, devoting himself largely to composing until he emigrated in 1938 to the United States, where he died in 1942, aged 70, in Larchmont, New York

As a composer, Zemlinsky fell into the crack between traditional Romanticism and the extremes of 20th-century modernism. Although he was an ardent promoter of the music of Schoenberg and his followers, he himself did not go down the 12-note road. He never abandoned tonality, but wrote in a late-Romantic idiom that often made exotic and luxurious use of a large orchestra. There is a certain affinity to the extravagances of the Jugendstil movement in art, and the revival of "Kleider Machen Leute" undoubtedly was linked to the mammoth exhibition, "Dream and Reality," on fin-de-siècle Vien-na that has just closed.

"Kleider Machen Leute" - roughly A scene from "Kleider Machen Leute."

"Clothes Make the Man" — is based on a he had no more successes. He fled first to Gottfried Keller tale about a tailor's apprentice who is taken for a Polish nobleman because of his exotic garb. Zemlinsky conducted the world premiere at the Volksoper in 1910. Although it is termed a "comic" opera or musikalische komödie, there is nothing very light about the finely tailored and rich orchestral part in which echoes of Strauss, Mahler and even Puccini could be heard. But - the sign of an experienced man of the theater — the words always came through clearly.

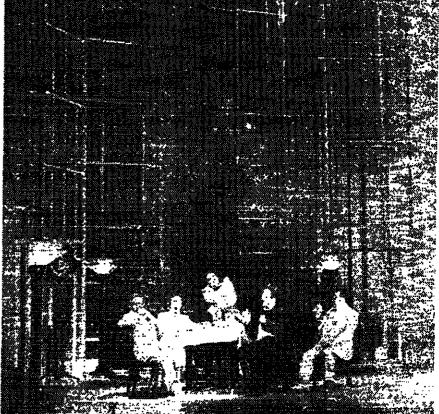

Zemlinsky's music did not make a comeback after the war, but in recent years it has started to be recorded and performed once again, along with that of other composers more or less of the same school. His one-act operas "Der Zwerg" and "Eine Florentin-ische Tragodie" have been successfully revived in Hamburg and London, and it looks as if the composer is finally emerging from decades of neglect.

Abraham was born in 1892 in Hungary, studied piano and composition at the Budapest academy, and composed a number of "serious" works before he found his talent for the lighter muse, "Viktoria" was at first unsuccessful in Budapest, but was reworked with a German book and became an instant hit in 1930 throughout the German-speaking lands and beyond. He followed this with two more hits, "Die Blume von Hawaii" in 1931 and "Ball im Savoy" in late 1932, just before the roof fell in.

Although he stayed in Vienna until 1938, Zemlinsky, by Emil Orlik.

TRAVEL

Prague, City of Illusions

by Andrew Sinclair

RAGUE — We flew here, looking for Rabbi Loew. The Jews of this city had always been known for their brilliance and wisdom, Jehuda Loew ben Bezalel, or Rabbi Loew, a cabalist, scientist and alchemist of the Renaissance, died in 1609. So famous were his experiments that he was credited with the creation of the Golem, the clay giant of folklore who rises to defend the ghetto from its persecutors, then turns on its creators because it is not soon reduced back to clay.

The Golem lives because the Hebrew characters for Truth are engraved on its forehead; aleph, mem, soph. It becomes lifeless clay when the first letter is crased, leaving the Hebrew word for Death. The Golem historical Rabbi Loew is the prototype of Dr. Frankenstein, the maker of a monstrous man. The purpose is good, the creation of a perfect creature or a savior. The error is that a human being should not try to fabricate himself. If he does that, he will be destroyed

Cedok, the Czechoslovak state travel agency, is meant to provide guides and trans-port for a long weekend in Prague, but a muted chaos controls the airport. After vouchers are exchanged for Czech money and visas are scrutinized and luggage collected, all guides and airport buses are departed. So the best thing is to take a taxi to the hotel. The taxi drivers are guides and moneychangers anyway, running an alternative the sweet tooth of Habsburg empresses.

The Alcron is within walking distance of the sights of the ancient city. The way to the Prague ghetto lies past the Tyl Theater, where Mozart's "Don Giovanni" had its first performance, and on to the Old Town Square. Nothing is straight in Prague — streets curve and bend and slope aslant, walls lean, weird towers protrude and balconies jut out, all is askew, yet harmonious in colors of faded red and other and green. The twin irregular spires or the Tyn Church dominate the sprawling Old Square, where a famous medieval clock brings out a skeleton Death tinkling his bell, as the Saints progress above two cosmic circles of time, and the four Gospelers tock their heads to the clang of the strokes of the hour. By the clock is the Staromestske Namesti Café with the best hot dogs in town and slivovitz (plum brandy) on fruit ice cream. There the few Russian soldiers sit, unseen by the waiters, until they slouch off as though they were not there. The Prague ghetto, the oldest and best preserved in Europe, is now a State Jewish Museum. The Old-New Synagogue was built in the late 13th century in the Gothic style under low arches. Surrounded by wooden pews, a railed almemar stands, where the Rabbi Loew once read the Tahmid. Above it, a dusty red banner still hangs, the copy of the flag that the Holy Roman Emperor, Charles IV, gave the Jews of Prague to raise

The most evocative of the hotels is the Alcron in the Old City. Dining there is like taking a cruise on a liner of the 1930s, surrounded by veneered wood and curving brass and dominated by a life-size bronze of

Time for a drink and a cake in the tavern of the poets, the Viola at 7 Nardi on the river embankment, where sad old ladies sit looking at time gone by. Then a walk over the

Charles Bridge toward the castle on its hill on the far side of the river by the green White Mountain, where Czech independence was destroyed three and a half centuries ago, and the Stuart Winter Queen had to flee back to the arms of her brother King Charles I, soon to lose his throne too in a civil war. Vendors fill the bridge, selling little pictures and amulets, leatherwork and decorated shells. Blackened saints dominate the parapets of the bridge and bless the swans in their dozens, gliding beneath. An ancient watchtower guards either end of the oldest river bridge in a European capital, from where a legendary skyline broods upon the past. Symbolists believe there is a secret in the placing of the spires of Prague, but all we see is mystery and a touch of magic. The way up the castle hill is steep and winding but the taverus, called vinarus, encourage and refresh. Within the walls is a little city with a Renaissance Golden Lane of tiny shops, a Romanesque basilica of exquisite simplicity as old as a millenium, and St. Vitus's Cathedral, which still dances with perpendicular arches heaven-high, and Peter Parler's Wenceslas Chapel. This memorial to the Good King of the Christmas carol is encrusted with semiprecious stones, set below frescoes of the royal exploits. You can watch him bearing winter fuel to the old woman in her cottage while a page in red treads in his footseps boldly. Outside, looking over Prague from a restaurant placed beneath the walls, we see a hawk has built its nest on the iron cross above the spire of one of the many Baroque churches that gild and dazzle the eyes.

For all is hidden in Prague, as we discover that evening. Behind its sleepy summer facade, there are whole blocks of arcades and walkways, full of markets and advertisements, cinemas and theaters, bustle and excitement. It is the closed face of Prague, its doppelganger, that other legend of two selves that derives from the city. Too many forced occupations by too many alien pow-ers and faiths have led the citizens of Prague to live behind doors, within corridors, show-

That is confirmed when we visit the Alhambra in the evening, a nightclub trapped in time with two tiers of tables surrounding the dance floor beneath friezes of suggestive golden cupids. The show features dances from between the wars, the brief last period of true Czech independence before it collapsed before Hitler's advance. Even the Golem comes on stage between the chorus girls, then pops apart to reveal a dwarf ringmaster. But the highlights are the performances of Czechoslovakia's greatest illusion, developed in the Lanterna Magica, where black velvet drapes back a puppet Mickey Mouse getting drunk on vodka and walking a fluorescent tightrope that becomes a snake and tries to strangle him. There is caviar, there to eat, Russia's finest gift, and good to local white wine, and a band that plays all the old American rock tunes at the drop of a foreign name.

Prague is the city of magic, of illusions, of things that are never what they seem to be. It has survived centuries of occupation, and survives still. It is the richest city in Europe for those who love its legends, its glories and its style. Go there for a good time, but also for time past, and you will come away encrusted with the memories of its precious stones. And do not forget the prophecy of Rabbi Loew: "The Golem is part of the belief that lasts forever. It will use again at the end of human existence, but in quite a different form."

The Best Business Hotels

by Roger Collis

T is no coincidence that luxury hotels in the Far East consistently surpass those in other parts of the world in surveys among business travelers. Most people put it down to an innate Oriental flair for providing that efusive quality called "hospitality." Unlike many Western hotels, where the staff act as if they're doing you a favor to et you stay there, the best in Singapore, Hong Kong and Thailand make the most jaded business guest feel like a VIP. In a poll of international bankers, pub-ished in the September issue of Institutional Investor magazine, the top five hotels in the world are in Asia — the Oriental in Bangkok (rated best for the fifth year running) the Mandarin and the Regent in Hong Kong, the Okura in Tokyo and the Shangri-La in-Singapore. The Vier Jahreszeiten in Hamburg was rated sixth, while the best hotel in the Americas was the Four Seasons in Washrigton, D. C., rated 16th.

gton, D. C., rated 16th. Predictably, the bankers have chosen most of the famous names; the Connaught in London (8th), the recently refurbished Ritz Far East seem in Paris (9th), the Regent in Sydney (11th), the Dolder Grand in Zurich (12th), the Hassler Villa Medici in Rome (13th), the Imperial in Vienna (17th) and the Carlyle in New York (18th).

All of these hotels are included in a short list of 50 (13 of them in the Far East) in a new guide. The World's Best Business Hotels, published this month in London (by Hotel Guides International Ltd., 571 pages, £39.95). Edited by William Davis, a British author and former financial journalist, the guide contains full-page descriptions of 500 business hotels in 80 countries. Davis claimed it took himself and six contributors 18 months to compile and involved the screening of over a thousand hotels. Each entry contains a long description with an artist's impression and a 10-point list of key requirements, such as personal and business services, eating and drinking. One of Davis's prime considerations is central location. Apart from half a dozen of his favorite resort hotels, which he rationalizes as being great for conventions (while adjuring the traveler to avoid conventioneers), the selection has been limited to estabhishments likely to provide easy access to ppointments in major business centers. We have also borne in mind that many businessmen consider it important to have a temporary address which local people regard as prestigious," Davis says.

the best hotel in a particular place, which doesn't mean they're all up to traditional standards. The best in Timbuktu won't measure up to the best in London. I mean, some of the hotels in the Middle East are falling

By and large, this has been a sensible policy. The problem is the selection of business centers. For example, the guide lists two hotels in Newcastle on Tyne in England one of which is the Holiday Inn, not convenient to the city — but neglects to hist one in Bern, Switzerland, which has a distinguished hotel, the Schweizerhof, next to the train station. Then, as Davis points out, some cities, like New Orleans, have almost a glut of good hotels. But does this justify listing four in that city compared with only two in Philadelphia and one in Cleveland? And 500 listed hotels (although it gives the manwhy list three hotels in the Channel Islands and none in cities like Marseille, Toulouse, Lille or Bremen?

In the final analysis, any guide must rely yn subjective judgments. Davis believes that the star system is useless because it's so different in each country. So he has avoided grading in any way. "Whether a hotel seems better than another largely depends on individual tastes," he says. Even the guide's top 50 hotels in the front of the book are listed in no particular order. They're all outstanding, according to Davis. His own favorite is the Oriental in Bangkok and gives high praise to the Mandain in Hong Kong, the Regent in Sydney, the Plaza Athenée in Paris and the Beverly Wilshire in Los Angeles.

A clue to the Oriental's pre-eminence is a combination of central location and superb view across the Chao Phya river, elegant decor and a high ratio of staff to guests (nearly 1,000 for only 405 rooms). The Institutional Investor puts it down to a hotelier's maxim that a large, professional Asian staff and a European manager (German-born Kurt Wachveitl) make the ideal team.

The Regent in Sydney is a good example of a hotel that really understands the business traveler's needs. All its rooms have a proper desk, three telephones and an international news service that operates on the color TV. There is a fully equipped business center, an in-house print shop and a wellstocked reference library.

One of Davis's pet hates is hotels that maximize business by encouraging people from outside to use their restaurants and bars, for which residents have to compete "We were staying at the Waldorf in a $300 suite and couldn't get a table for breakfast, they said they'd been booked out for two days by local businessmen for breakfast meetings. Hoteliers should make up their minds whether they want to be restaurants

This is possibly why there is a trend towards small hixnry hotels where there is less risk of encountering hordes of boisterous conventioneers. But elegant, clubby proper-ties with intimate service are still not easy to find. Davis cites the 57-room Lancaster in Paris as a good example ("A real gem"), and the Ritz-Carltons in New York and Washington and the Hay-Adams and the Madison Washington. These have between 165 and 370 rooms and are furnished with paintings and antique furniture from Europe. John Coleman, proprietor of the Ritz-Carltons, is proud of his four-posters and million-dollar collection of old English paintings in the Jockey Club restaurant of his New York hotel. David Murdock, who acquired the Hay-Adams in 1983, has simed to turn it into the American version of an English

Small within big can also be beautiful. Some of the large chains have created separate hixnry wings or floors for the business traveler. A good example of this is the Shera-ton in Stockholm, which has 51 rooms on its top floor with special elevator and registration, two telephones in the room and many extras. A hostess will book airline tickets and take care of telexes and typing.

A minor quibble is that the guide doesn't agers' names). According to Davis, the best three chains in the world are the Four Seasons, the Mandarin and the Regent group.
He also rates highly the Taj group in India.
But it depends on the region. "Marriott, for example, has downmarket hotels in America, but excellent ones in the Middle East.—the Marriott in Cairo or Amman is absolutely one of the best hotels. And in many cases the Hiltons are best," he says.

co state coach, or Golden Carriage, that was built in Paris in 1738 for Prince Joseph Wenzel of Liechtenstein as ambassador from the Holy Roman Empire to the French court. That this should ever have been brought to this country, let alone carried up the main staircase of the Met, is one of the marvels of modern muscology. It weighs approximately 3,100 pounds. The coach gives a completely new dimension to the idea of being taken from place to place, and even if it cannot keep company in New York with the magnificent stallions from the family stud in Eisgrub, we can at least have a look at those stallions in the portraits of them painted by Johann Georg von Hamilton.

Act II is in no way an anticlimax, but these particular program notes are not going to give away its secrets. If there is something to regret about the whole undertaking, it is that none of the previous princely collectors can come down from the Elysian Fields to see what came of their ever-varied, ever-ardent activities. I think in particular of Prince Karl

I (1569-1627), who so loved mysterious and beantiful objects like the perpetual calendar in the present show, and of Prince Karl Eusebins (1611-1684), virtually walled up in his country house during the Thirty Years' War and dreaming of the bronzes by Giovanni Bologna that he had seen in Florence as a very young man.

Later connoisseurs come to mind, also, like Prince Johannes II (1840-1929), who lived through the first great age of serious art history and liked nothing better than to travel around with Wilhelm von Bode, the foremost picture-fancier of his day in Germany, ("He's really too much," Bode said afterward. "The word 'breakfast' has no meaning for him.") At least we have in town Franz Josef II, now in his 80th year, who knows attributions even with Rode himself bandy attributions even with Bode himself and has looked forward as much as the rest of us to this exhibition.

His oprettas seem today to occupy a vague yo-man's land between sub-Lehar, late Vienese operetta and 1920s American musical comedy. Since Abraham, like most musical comedy composers, did not do his own orchestration, it is hard to say how Johannes Fehring's arrangement for the Raimund's copening might compare with the original. in any case, although many of the hit iongs still live in the memories of many

Viennese of a certain age, this is music that has been overtaken by time. It has neither the nostalgic aura of the best Viennese operettas nor the polish of an American musical. And the production at the Raimund did not have the sophistication that might have saved the day. It lacked a real star for the title role and had not much to offer in the required exotic settings except for heavy use of the theater's new revolving stage.

Ways and Means of Rating | Reports From the Underground

HE New York subway is hardly con-sidered one of the city's tourist attractions, but the situation is different in some of the world's capitals and other major cities. Correspondents of The New York Times report on their subway systems, from the chandeliers of Moscow to the Aztec temple of Mexico City.

London

HE first thing you need to know is that it is always called the Underground and never the subway; a subway is a pedestrian passage under a street, at least in London. The second is that it doesn't run all night, and you had better not plan on using it much before 6 A.M. or much after 11:30 P.M. The third is you must hold on to your ticket, which is priced according to your destination, until the end of the ride, vhere you will be asked to surrender it.

London's Underground is the world's old-- the first line having been opened on Jan. 9, 1863 — and the world's most extensive, with more than 250 stations, more than 750 miles of track and 130 giant ventilation fans that keep the temperature at 73 degrees year round. But by comparison with those of Paris, New York and Moscow, London's system carries relatively few people, "only" 540 million a year.

By common consent, the worst of the nine lines is the Northern, which is deep, dank and dark, and the grubbiest station is Leicester Square. The Victoria line, finished in 1971, and the Jubilee line, completed in 1979, are the newest. In an extensive program of refurbishment, a number of stations have been given distinct personalities, with 19th-century wrought iron and portraits of Sherlock Holmes ornamenting the station at Baker Street, mosaics of medieval Britain at Charing Cross, tile cameos of Queen Victoria at Victoria Station, trendy cafes and boutiques at Bond Street.

The names of the stations have always fascinated me. Paris has its Babylone and Pyramides and Austerlitz, but no name there has quite the eccentricity — the sheer improbability -- of Cockfosters or The Angel or Elephant and Castle. And what creatures must a child expect to encounter at Shepherd's Bush?

—R. W. Apple Jr.

Bonn

HERE are first-time visitors who exclaim that tiny, slumberous Bonn can't really be the capital of the most powerful nation in Western Europe. You can ride a bicycle in half an hour from one end of the town to the other, and a lot of people do. There is an airport 20 minutes away across the Rhine, but of course it's shared with Cologne, a more plausible city. The Bonn train station has only two tracks. Yet Bonn has one undeviable attribute of European capital: a subway. It is a very small, very clean and very safe subway. Built in the early 1970s, it exists largely to disabuse the doubters about Bonn's shaky capi-

The capital's subway --- well, if the truth be told, some of it actually runs above ground - has 19 stations and 52 cars. It zedly carries 150,000 riders a day, which is half the population of Bonn, and would seem to mean that a lot of outsiders or repeaters are on board. Or that the statistic is inflated. These people do not spray graffiti on the sides of the immaculate subway cars: nor do they litter, or even casually throw pieces of paper on the ground. All these activities are strictly forbidden.

The managers of the Bonn subway noted that plastic bus seats were being vandalized, so they upholstered the seats in the subway. This is said to have an inhibiting effect on would-be vandals who are reluctant to mess up something so nice. Similarly, the main subway station has an unscathed collection of modern art hanging on its walls.

There is one known vice practiced on the Bonn subway, and that is sneaking onto its trains without paying. About 3 percent of riders are thought to do this. That makes almost 1.6 million a year. Roaming inspectors slap tough fines on "black" riders; the fines have to be paid on the spot, and if the violator doesn't have the cash he is taken to the police station.

Moscow

HE Moscow subway is almost everything people say it is: fast, comfortable, frequent and virtually free of litter, advertising or crime.
But what really draws the tourists are the stations. Each one is different, and each is a unique exercise in that monumental, marble-and-mosaic extravagance that for so long was mandatory for official Soviet architec-ture. The massively columned entrances, the iron statues of well-muscled peasants, the dazzling chandeliers and the mosaics singing the glories of Soviet feats tell as much about the Soviet state as the architecture of the Kremlin tells about the days of the czars. A ride on the ring line that circles the old city center and connects with eight lines that stretch to the far reaches of the capital is a tour of high Socialist Realism. It was built in the early postwar years, when Soviet building celebrated the sense of might and destiny that came with victory over Nazi Germany. Along the ring line are some of Moscow's more celebrated glittering station-temples, each the winning entry by different teams of architects and artists: the Komsomolskaya station, with its red granite floors and its ceilings decorated in mosaic depictions of great Russian heroes; the Byelorusskaya station, gleaming with white marble columns and richly tiled floors and ornamented with a mosaic frieze celebrating the "peaceful, creative labor of the Byelorussian peoples, and the Novoslobodskava station, one of the last creations of the late Alexei N. Dushkin, who may justly be called the Picasso of the Moscow underground. When opened in 1952, the Novoslobodskaya station introduced of Art Deco to the Metro with its glowing stained-glass columns.

Dushkin was also the architect of the Mayakovsky station, a futuristic composition of polished stainless steel and gray marble that was opened in 1938. It was there, deep under Mayakovsky Square, that the annual rally marking the anniversary of the October Revolution was held on Nov. 6, 1941, when German guns were within range of Moscow.

Of late, Moscow newspapers have taken to riping at the administration of the Metro for letting some of the trim deteriorate. The papers have charged that some chandeliers have been replaced with fluorescent fixtures, floor tiles have been mismatched and some white marble benches have disappeared.

Moskovskaya Pravda even marshaled the widow of the honored Professor Dushkin to speak against the installation of mundane lighting fixtures at the Novoslobodskaya station. "Alexei Nikolayevich in the last years of his life raised this subject, so painful to him, more than once, but without effect, as time has shown," she wrote.

Mexico City

EXICO CITY'S Metro system is worth a visit not only in order to see how clean and quiet a subway system can be but also to enjoy a variety of archaeological and cultural exhibits. The fare is about a third of a U.S. cent.

At the station underneath the city's historic Zócalo, or central plaza, on Line 2, visitors can see huge, side-by-side models of the area in Aztec, colonial and modern times, before going upstairs to see how little it has changed: There, in among the still mostly colonial buildings, is the recent excavation of the Aztec Templo Mayor, or main temple. One stop away, in the Pino Suárez station, a small Aztec pyramid sits at a central point of the crossing between Lines 1 and 2, drawing admiring glances from even the most habitual local travelers. It was discovered by accident in 1967, when the station was being built, and the entire station was redesigned to accommodate it.

Such are the number of artifacts still under Mexico's surface that an archaeologist now accompanies construction crews on all Metro digs. A recent find was the skeleton of a mammoth (close to the Talisman station on Line 4), which is expected to be reconstructed and put on display at the station in

Milan

HE subway may be the place where Milan best lives up to its claim to being a city of Europe's north, far from the chaos of Naples or Palermo.

The atmosphere is of the city's work ethic: Not much talk, men and women busiling by, rushing to work as if the city's stern patron, St. Ambrose, would judge them hard if they came in late.

The system connects mainly the northeast and northwest outskirts to the center of town. That means you will see more Ferra-gamo and Valentino on the vast tram and bus system, or in the taxis used by the city's well-to-do. You won't see many factory workers, either, since the industries are largely outside the city.

The people of the subway might be thought of as Milan's silent majority, the clerks, salespeople and office workers who make this white-collar town run.

-E. J. Dionne

Tokyo

HE Tokyo subway system serves as a reasonable metaphor for the city that swirls above it. The ckikatetsu, as it is called in Japanese, is safe, on time, brightly lighted and clean. Unlike the city, it is also well marked and reasonably priced, at least in central parts of town. What more could one ask?

But also like the city it serves, the Tokyo subway lacks, for want of a better term, a romantic soul. The Tokyo system is purely functional. Despite the velvetlike seats on every train, you cannot truly call the chikatetsu attractive. Yes, it is clean; so is an operating room. Each station on the subway's 10 lines looks much like all the others. They even sound alike: All are equipped with prerecorded announcements that advise when trains are coming and urges riders to stand behind a white line on the platform.

With 2.2 billion passengers a year, it is a terribly crowded system. By now many foreigners have seen or heard about the subway employees who shove groaning passengers into cars and then peel them out like artichoke leaves. In fact, those workers can be found only at certain hours in key commuter Still, wherever you go, the crowding can be fierce. So can the rudeness, to the surprise of many visitors. Expect and give no quarter in the scramble for seats. The advice here, especially during peak hours, is to let the crowd sweep you along. To resist is to swim against a strong tide. Most of all, be leery of elderly women in kimonos. They may look elegant and benign, but they have dardike reflexes and saber-sharp elbows.

Vienna

For sightseers, Vienna's six-year-old U-Bahn (the U stands for Untergrund, or underground) is useful above all because it takes them quickly and comfortably from the historical center of the city to Schonbrunn Palace, once the summer residence of the Hapsburg emperors, and to the Prater, the vast recreation area between the Danube River and the Danube Canal.

The three completed routes of the stillexpanding U-Bahn network converge at the Karlsplatz station, which incorporates the Opernpassage, a sunken mall below the city's busiest intersection, near the State Op-

For a visit to the former imperial castle take the U-4 line and get out at the Schönbrunn or Hietzing-Kennedy Brücke stop.

The latter is one of the more than 20 stations of a now nearly defunct metropolitan railway, the Stadthahn, that were designed by the fin-de-siècle architect Otto Wagner. It is a Baroque revival pavilion with Art Nouveau decorations and a barrel vault. Like other Wagner stations (including the one on the Karlsplatz, which has been transformed into a cafe and a largely Art Nouveau museum) it has been lovingly restored.

For the Prater, take the north-south U-1 line to the Praterstern. You might start from the Stephansplatz station, near St. Stephen's Cathedral. In the Stephansplatz underpass. near the escalators to the subway platforms. you will see ancient Roman columns and other artifacts that were unearthed during construction work in the 1970s. The underpass also leads to the Chapel of St. Virgil, a well-preserved Romanesque crypt that was rediscovered during the subway excavations.

Vienna's U-Bahn has so far cost more than $1 billion. The stations and air-conditioned trains are clean, safe and quiet especially near the State Opera, where the tracks are embedded in rubber to make sure the rumble of the trains won't interfere with

Beijing

OSCOW'S is grander, and in Pyongyang the statues of Kim II Sung are alone worth the price of admission. But when China set out to build its first subway nearly 20 years ago, it achieved a distinction that was all its own.

The Cultural Revolution was at its madcap peak when Mao Zedong decided that Beijing had to have an underground railway. Tens of thousands of soldiers dug for three years, night and day, and when the subway was finished, in 1969, they locked the 24 stations and went away.

It stayed that way for several years. Then one day in 1974 a trip on the Beijing subway was added to the list of of entertainments for visiting dignitaries, who rode solemnly along 15 miles of deserted track in trains empty of anybody but themselves. Yet the system remained about as useful, and as used, as a Ming emperor's tomb.

Along with just about everthing else that the government touches, the subway has changed in recent years. With Mao in his mausoleum, the buzzword is practicality. and the subway is working fine. Last year a new 10-mile rectangular line was added to the original east-west sweep, its stations more of less synonymous with the gates along the now-vanished city wall.

There are many pleasures — a ride is inexpensive; the stations are spotless, as are the made-in-China cars; signs are posted in English, and there will be somebody who can speak some English on almost any car, at any hour of the day.

Despite all this, subway riding has yet to catch on with a fair proportion of the city's population of 9.5 million. Partly because the people who run the buses have made little attempt to align the bus stops with the stations, partly because the subway is inconvenient to many of the most densely inhabited parts of town and partly because the Chinese are inseparably wedded to the bicycle, the trains are crowded only in rush hour, and then not impossibly so.

Paris

HE Paris Métro may be the only urban transport system in the world that has transformed its passenger ticket into a fashion item. There are Ticket T-Shirts, Ticket cocktail glasses and Ticket tote bags, all decorated with a replica of the vivid yellow-and-brown Metro ticket — to say nothing of Ticket wallets and briefcases and pens and pencils, beach blankets and coffee mugs, cigarette lighters and jewelry. Prices range from about $1 for a key chain to about $50 for a watch with a map of the suburban rail system, the RER, on its face.

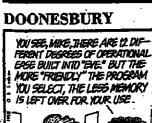

The Régie Autonome des Transports Parisiens, or RATP, which runs the city's buses, subways and suburban lines, decided six or seven years ago to merchandise the ticket as a way to lure new riders. A few promotional items were produced as part of the cam-paign. No one anticipated their popularity.

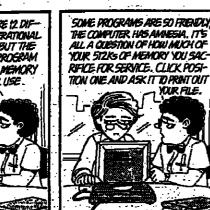

Now, the RATP runs its own gift shop at the Châtelet station and will open another shop at a station yet to be announced later this year. The Printemps department store has its own Ticket shop, and the items are sold in all the airports and train stations.

The RATP grossed well over $1.5 million from Ticket items last year. The best sellers? Key rings, cigarette lighters, shower curtains, watches and, yes, men's shorts.

Italians introduce dynamic new ideas to menswear

It seems the English male is at last casting off his circles. The news is that international Italian house Zegna a name synonymous with high quality clothes for men, has moved into top store Fortnum and Mason with a range of ready-to-wear suits and accessories made in materials of particular excellence. Sufficient to add, Zegna is the biggest name in the quality market throughout the world.

At the same time the Italians have brought to London their unique made-to-measure service and for Fortnum and Mason bespoke it is a first time adventure. The man about town looks a likely customer.

'Many men in the world want to wear Zegna" says UK Managing Director, Stephen Peters "but cannot get a proper fit with ready-to-wear."

The strong, severe style that epitomises Zegna tailoring has already created an international market for men of taste who demand excellence in their wardrobe as well as in their homes and the cars they drive.

Fabrics bring a new horizon to this country, woven by the company with a magnificent use of colour and design, Precise cut and immaculate accessories - knitwear, waistcoats and ties - have taken this family company to a top rating in world markets.

Now it is Britain's turn to enjoy the excitement and fun that comes from the sweet touch of the best.

The contemporary man wears a suit. The sophisticated British male knows all about good tailoring. He grew up with a long tradition of the best in the world.

A Return to Propellers Seen IMF, Urges Ushering in the Post-Jet Age

By ANDREW POLLACK

New York Times Service

AN FRANCISCO — When jet planes replaced propeller-driven planes in the 1950s, it was considered a great leap forward in aviation. Now, the next major advance in propellers. The new engines, known as propfan engines or ultra-high bypass engines, promise a 40-percent to 50-percent savings in fuel over existing jet engines.

Both Boeing Co. and McDonnell Douglas Corp. say they will have planes using such engines on the market in the early 1990s. Boeing is planning to test-fly a propfan engine next year and McDonnell Douglas plans one in 1987. In their tests, both will develop the propfan plane.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is also working on such engines, with Lockheed Corp. as its major contractor, and a test flight using a Gulfstream airplane is scheduled for 1987. Others are also working on the new engines. Propellers have always been more fuel-efficient than jet propulsion. But jets won out for commercial aircraft because they were faster. Indeed, until the oil price increases of the 1970s, fuel costs were not a concern.

The propfan engine promises to provide the efficiency of propellers in a plane that can travel as fast as jets. Advances in engine and propeller design now make possible propellers that can function at high speeds.

NDEED, the propfan propellers bear little resemblance to the traditional long thin sticks. The General Electric propel-lers are shorter and stubbier, more bent and more numerous than usual propellers. They are on the rear of the engine rather than the front. And they are arranged in two rows that rotate in opposite directions. The back row takes the swirl out of the air caused by the front row, increasing efficiency.

Both propellers and jet engines work by pushing air backward, which thrusts the plane forward. Rotating propellers, however, push a large amount of air backward relatively slowly. Jet engines, known as turbojets, thrust a smaller amount of air They do this by compressing the air, igniting it with the fuel and thrusting it violently out through a turbine and the back nozzle.

But since turbojets appeared, engine design has slowly been turning back toward the use of propellers. Indeed, today's jets use a type of engine known as a turbofan, which combines elements of propellers and jet propulsion.

In the turbofan, some air still coarse.

of propellers and jet propulsion.

In the turbofan, some air still goes in the front, is compressed and ignited, powers the turbine and is thrust out the back. But there is also a fan, powered by the turbine, that blows air around the engine. This bypassing air provides most of the thrust for the plane. This all takes place inside a shell covering the engine, which provides a duct through which the air can flow smoothly. The fan, which has many tiny blades, thus acts like a propeller, although it does not look like a propeller and is hidden from view. by the casing around the engine.

But if a little air bypassing the engine adds to efficiency, why (Continued on Page 17, Col. 4)

Peru Assails Talks at UN Minister Suggests World Currency

Washington Post Service SEOUL — Peru reiterated Thursday its threat to withdraw from the International Monetary Fund, and it called for a special United Nations conference to revamp the world monetary order and create a new international cur-

But it did not announce its actual withdrawal, which some delegates had been led to expect. Peru's prime minister, Luis Alva

Castro, addressing the annual joint meeting of the IMF and World Bank, said austerity policies im-posed by the IMF in heavily indebted countries had only "deep-ened recession and threatened democracy."

"The countries of the Third World are condemned to hunger in the name of economic balance," he said, according to an unofficial translation, in a speech that repeat-edly attacked the United States.

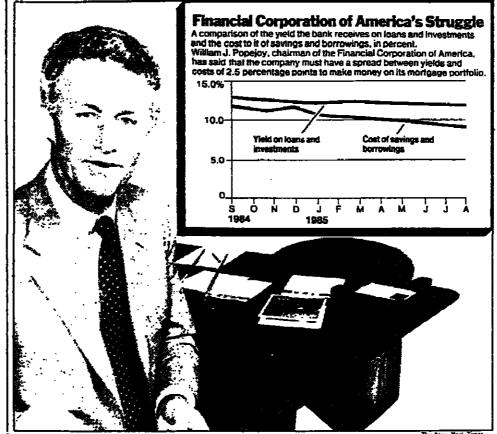

Peru, which has a foreign debt of about $13.5 billion, has emerged as one of the most radical of the Latin debtor countries in opposing the controls required by the IMF in return for loans. President Alan García Pérez recently said Peru would limit debt payments to 10 percent of its export earnings.

Mr. Garcia had also said Peru might leave the IMF, leading to speculation that Mr. Alva would announce such a move in his speech. But he only repeated Mr. García's earlier statement.

Mr. Alva's speech, one of the trongest public statements in the 10 days of meetings here that end Friday, was applauded loudly by many delegates. But many of his proposals were considered unlikely Mr. Alva said the United Nations should organize a conference to create a new international cur-rency. He said the present system was inefficient and outdated. He also charged that the IMF served only to concentrate capital in the

FCA Recovering, but Still Vulnerable

A Rise in Interest Rates Could Menace Thin Capital Base

By Thomas C. Hayes New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES — Since William J. Popejoy succeeded Charles W. Knapp as chairman of troubled Financial Corp. of America in August 1984, the company has benefited from a three-percentage-point drop in short-term interest rates. That decline has brought record profits to many of Mr. Popejoy's large competitors in California.

However, for Financial Corp. and its main subsidiary, American Savings & Loan Association the largest U.S. thrift institution — it has not been

And the company is still vulnerable if interest rates head upward. Mr. Popejoy agreed with the projection by Jonathan E. Gray, an industry analyst with Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., that it would take less than a year for a one-percentage-point rise in short-term rates to erase Financial Corp.'s thin supply of capital if the company did nothing different to generate profits or reduce interest

But if we didn't do anything, we should be fired," Mr. Popejoy added. He noted that Financial Corp. had been collecting fees from new mortgages, employing interest rate swaps, hedging on interest-rate futures and issuing mortgage-backed securities to ease the threat of rising rates.

Under Mr. Knapp, the thrift institution grew 40 percent a year so that by the end of 1984, it ranked first among U.S. thrifts in terms of deposits.

He attracted widespread attention with an unusual bet. As other savings and loan associations withdrew from the mortgage market when interest rates rose in the 1970s, Financial Corp.'s thrift subsidiary, then called State Savings & Loan, actively issued mortgages, paying high prices in the market for the necessary funds. The yield on its mortgage portfolio was among the highest in the industry but come its among the highest in the industry, but so was its cost of funds.

And under Mr. Knapp, the thrift institution accumulated high expenses and a mountain of bad real-estate loans, which contributed to its subse-

In 1983, the Securities and Exchange Commission questioned the company's accounting practices, and forced it to reduce its 1982 earnings.

In August 1984, American Savings & Loan faced huge deposit outflows after the SEC forced it to restate its first-half earnings of $75.3 million to a loss of $79.9 million. Last April, after reporting a staggering loss of $590.5 million for 1984, the

NEW YORK - Only onethird of top U.S. executives responding to a survey expected mproved business conditions in the next six months, the Con-ference Board said Thursday.

The 1,000 respondents indicated a lower appraisal of eco-nomic conditions during the third quarter than during the first six months of 1985. The board's index of business confidence dropped to 51 on a scale of 100, a point lower than in the second quarter and 10 below

"The mild optimism ex-pressed by chief executives earier this year has yet to be rekindled," said Douglas Cliggott, the economist who adminis tered the survey.

Alsthom to Buy Cable Business From Sprecher

AARAU, Switzerland . Sprecher & Schuh AG said Thursday that Alsthom of France would acquire its highand medium-voltage cable busi-nesses and its industrial plant construction activities, as well as related subsidiaries abroad.

The company gave no value for the transaction. Sprecher & Schuh would continue to operate in the low-voltage cable sector and retain its switches and related businesses, its engineering bureau Indumation AG and its computer software unit Retis Realume Software AG.

Sprecher & Schuh had group sales of 540-million Swiss francs ($248.4 million) in 1984 and made a profit of 2 million francs. The 1984 net profit was the company's first since 1978.

Montreal, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Bank of Nova Scotia, Toronto Dominion Bank and National Bank of Canada are known to be trying to compensate for commercial deposits that have been withdrawn from Mercantile. Citicorp is also believed to be involved in helping Mercantile over what most term a "liquidity crisis." Mercantile has total assets of about $4.4 billion, deposits of about $4 billion and six branches.

Xerox Changes Crum Officers

LOS ANGELES - Xerox Corp., which last week reported losses in its insurance operations, has announced a shakeup in the management of its Crum & Forster Inc. subsidiary. It said Melvin Howard became chairman and chief executive of Crum & Forster, succeding John K. Lundberg, who resigned. Sidney F. Wentz Crum's president, was named chief operating officer. John J. McGinty, formerly of Xerox, is the new chief financial officer. James J. Cutro, Crum's senior executive vice president became vice chairman and chief administrative officer.

From Sperry

DETROIT - Ford Motor Co. announced Thursday that it will buy the New Holland farm mainery division of Sperry Corp. for $330 million and the assumption of $110 million in Habilities. Donald Petersen, Ford's chairman, said New Holland would be merged with Ford's agricultural operations, already among the largest in the United States with annual sales of $1.25 billion.

Sperry will retain some of New Holland's liabilities, Ford said, but it did not give any figure. Mr. Petersen said Ford planned no immediate changes at New Holland, including in its product lineup. Its primary products include harvesting equipment such as combines and balers.

The combination, Mr. Petersen said, will allow Ford to "compete vigorously in all segments of the New Holland had revenue of $715 million in Sperry's fiscal year, which ended March 31, or 12.6 percent of Sperry's total revenue of $5.69 million. New Holland had a pretax profit of $34 million in the fiscal year, down from $72 million. Sperry said the sale of New Hol-land would result in Sperry recording an aftertax loss from discontinued operations of $220 million in its second quarter, which ended Sept. 30. Sperry earned $99.5 million in the same quarter a year ago.

New Holland has plants in Pennsylvania and Nebraska and has operations in 10 other countries. Rumors that the acquisition was being planned surfaced early in the year and again after Ford lost out to General Motors Corp. in its bid to buy Hughes Aircraft Co. Earlier this year, Sperry held talks with ITT Corp. and then Burroughs Corp. about possible merg-ers, but no agreements resulted.

"We consulted the workers, and the response is clear: They are not ready for a test of strength with the Renault management," said an of-ficial of the Socialist-leaning CFDT union at Renault's Flins plant, near Paris.

The CGT is looking increasingly isolated as other unions attacked the action or called for new, secret, strike votes

The walkout, which began on Tuesday at Le Mans and spread Wednesday to the Billancourt plant just outside Paris, was prompted by Renault's decision to cut year-end bonuses as part of a general plan to reduce costs to stem the group's heavy losses. Renault's losses are at present running at about I billion French francs ($125 million) a month.

WASHINGTON — A forme, asbestos-products maker has gone to court to try to force cigarette companies to share liability in law-suits by asbestos workers who smoked and who claim to have contracted serious or fatal lung diseases from exposure to the mineral.

GAF Corp., a large maker of building materials and chemicals, is basing the effort on long-known medical evidence that smoking sharply increases the risks of asbestos-related lung cancer and other diseases in asbestos workers. GAF named American Brands Inc., Philip Morris Inc., R.J. Reynolds Incursives Inc., Brown & Williamson, and Liggett Group, in the suit filed in Oakland, California.

Although it is a defendant in 20,000 to 30,000 asbestos product-liability cases, GAF has a relatively small part in the litigation in which the principal target has been Manville Corp. London Metals Oct. 10

By Bob Hagerty ional Herald Tribune LONDON -- Prices of crude oil have slumped in the past week as fears of short-term scarcity have abated.

Traders were worried a week ago that Iraqi bombing had almost entirely cut off Iranian exports of crude oil and that a drop in Soviet exports of heating oil would pinch the European market. But both Iranian crude oil and Soviet heating oil have been flowing into the market again, traders say.

Brent crude, the most widely traded North Sea variety, was quoted late Thursday at about $27.50 a barrel for November delivery. That is down from $28 Wednesday and $28.75 last Thursday at Control of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. BACKWARD progress is the theme of the eight pieces by John McPhee collected in "Table of Contents." Written for The New Yorker between 1981 and 1984, they bring news of old professions being rediscovered, of news of old professions being rediscovered, of obsolete technologies becoming viable again, of endangered animal species repopulating their old habitats, and of people finding new ways to live in what remains of the North

Even McPhee himself goes back to the funire, in a way. In "Open Man," he sketches some moments in the promising political career of the senior senator from New Jersey, Bill Bradley, who 30 years and 18 McPhee books ago, as a basketball star at Princeton University, became the subject of McPhee's first published work, "A Sense of Where You Are."

The news that these pieces bring is hearten-ing particularly if you happen to be a nature-loving traditionalist. Black bears are reinhabiting New Jersey without posing any threat to its human population ("A Textbook Place for Bears") and moose are once again thriving in Maine ("North of the C. P. Line"). Certain young doctors, rebelling against what they see as the overspecialization of modern medicine, are embracing what has oxymoronically been defined as the "comprehensive specialty" of family practice, and are cheerfully making house calls ("Heirs of General Practice").

In "Ice Pond," McPhee describes how the hero of his 10th book — Theodore B. Taylor of "The Curve of Binding Energy" (1973) — has turned his thoughts from nuclear weapons to a cheaper energy source, or what he calls a method of "harvesting the cold of winter for use in summer." Behold, it works! And in "Minihydro" — for my money the most exciting piece in the collection — we see how a 1978 congressional decision to require regional power companies to buy electricity from anyone who produces it, has led to the revival of the small-scale hydroelectric industry, in what McPhee describes paradoxically as a generally invisible feverish rush for riches." But just as important as the news McPhee brings are the details of the news, and as usual his writing is a minefield of amusing and curious trivia. Scientists who trap New Jersey black bears for tracking purposes have found that the best bait to use is any variety of Dunkin' Donut seasoned with a little anise extract. "That drives the bears wild," comments one biologist

Just as you can tell a bear's age by sectioning one of its teeth, you can judge the length of a human pregnancy by measuring the distance from the public bone to "the far side of the from the public bone to the far side of the uterus" and allowing a week per centineter "It's so consistent it's uncanny," says Dr. Ann Dorney of Skowhegan, Maine Writes McPhee, "Even God is on the metric system."

for the natives of Maine's most northern reaches, a fact that seems at odds with the machine's reputation as a curse on name? And, according to McPhee, "In a paper cup, gasoline burns quietly and does not blaze up in your face," an assertion I do not intend to test unless I absolutely have to.

What does blaze up in your face are the pyrotechnics that these encounters with the world set off in McPhee's verbal imagination. He has not yet fully recovered from the infam-He has not yet fully recovered from use man-ation with geology that produced his 15th and 16th books, "Basin and Range" (1981) and "In Suspect Terrain" (1983). The title "Table of Contents" may have been inspired by the notion of a plateau or landscape full of whatever has given the author satisfaction. In any case, the text itself contains occasional phrases like "a gorge of Precambrian amphibolite" and "a corniche along a high outcrop."

But elsewhere, the masonry of an old Victorian stone mansion "is grouted with daylight." Blown-down birch trees, seen from the air, "looked like stubbed cigarettes after a teen-age party." One black bear, when he is jabbeard with an anesthetic, begins "to nod like a dinner guest," and when he first wakes up again walks off "like an alumnus at a reunion."

In a passage inspired by some landscape that suggests to him "the narcotic glens of Burgnady." McPhee writes, "New Jersey may be the sliest state in the union, for New Jersey has hidden its Burgundys while concentrating both its visitors and its supreme uginess in one narrow band, moving millions of people a day in one side and out the other through scenes that suggest gunshot wounds in an infected Uncle Sam."

In the last piece in the book, "North of the C. P. Line," he describes his encounters with an aerial game warden from Maine who happens to have the same name. The warden had once written a letter to The New Yorker conplaining half-jokingly that its reporter was us-ing the warden's name. At the end of 'North of the C. P. Line." the author writes that when he thinks of his friend the warden, "I envy him his world" in the way "that one is sometimes drawn to be another person or live the life of a character encountered in a liction."

"Time and again," the piece concludes, "when I think of him, and such thoughts start running through my mind, I invariably find myself wishing that I were John McPhee 37 Many readers of "Table of Contents" will end up feeling that way about both the author and his subject.

■ WBC Strips Spinks of Title

The World Boxing Council has stripped Michael Spinks of his WBC light heavyweight world title on grounds that he violated a rule on champions holding only one division title at a time, The Associated Press reported from Bangkok.

The WBC had demanded that Spinks drop one of his titles following his victory over Larry Holmes last month for the International Boxing Federation heavyweight championship. Spinks remains world light heavyweight champion of the World Boxing Association and the IBF.

Not until college did I hear that scandalous song again. There it was being sung in a fraternity house. Hearing it again gave me no plea-

This may have been because it seemed almost childishly innocent compared to so many songs heard in the military during World War II. More likely, it was because there was something embarrassing in seeing grown men — college men, for heaven's sake! — singing that old childhood Columbus song under the misapprehension that they were being daring. I certainly was not embarrassed by hearing it sung on a campus and in a fraternity house. Song repertories among most students of my acquaintance included thick batches of mildly salacious to downright filthy material. A good percentage of it was lyrically superior to the plodding and dreary popular song

Meyer Berger of The New York

> Music censorship on the radio was silly and a failure if its purpose was to protect American youth from musical exposure to obscene vulgarity. In the years immediately after World War II, late-night saloon life in the United States was boisterous with youth crying for the piano player to render "Roll Me Over," "I Used To Work In Chicago" and similar harmless vulgarities for group singing.

> It is reassuring to know that censorship cannot diminish our youth's capacity to enjoy vulgarity to the fullest, for surely vulgar and obscene performances should not be tolerated in any public medium where the comfort of the general audience will be disturbed by a breakdown in decorum.

> The Dutch Schultz principle is as applicable to music as it is to newspapers. There is some music that when you hear it performed in circumstances where nobody is acting ashamed, makes you feel bad.

Donald McIntyre

As a Wagnerian Heldenbariton, He Leads A Hectic, Nomadic Existence

By Andrew Clark

ZURICH — Last month the Dutchman held pride of place; this month it is Hans Sachs, and for much of the rest of the season it will be Wotan. Somewhere in the background are Donald McIntyre's other established Wagner roles, and a new recording of "Parsifal" based on the Welsh National Opera production has just brought his Gurnemanz to an international audience for the first time. Wagner's music has dominated McIntyre's career since he began singing Heldenbariton roles 20 years ago. There followed an unbroken run of 15 summers at Bayreuth, where his repertoire encompassed as many major roles as any other singer in the festi-val's history. Now considered one of the most dependable and experienced bass-baritones on the international opera stage, McIntyre is free to choose where and what he sings.

A year ago it was Zurich to sing his first Hans Sachs in "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg." After this month's revival of the production, he goes to the Vienna State Opera for "Die Walkure," and his Wotan will also be heard in Paris early next year in a con-cert cycle of the "Ring" conduct-ed by Marek Janowski. He has also been engaged by James Levine to sing in the new "Ring" planned by the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

It is a hectic, nomadic existence, with up to nine months a year spent away from his home in England, but McIntyre seems to thrive on the pressure. He is a youthful, fit and energetic 50, with an accent that reflects his New Zealand background.

Bayreuth looms large in his conversation: Until his last festival there in 1981, McIntyre worked with many of the most famous postwar conductors and stage directors. Rudolf Kempe, who recommended him, was "the only conductor I knew who succeeded in making the orchestra follow the dynamic markings in the score exactly as Wagner had written them." McIntyre's audition at Bayreuth came within months of Wieland Wagner's death in 1966; his subsequent relationship with the composer's other grandson, Wolfgang, pro-vided the strongest thread in his Bayreuth experience and led to his singing Wotan throughout the five-year run of the "Ring" pro-duction by Patrice Chereau.

"My relations with Wolfgang have always been good. He has started so many singers off -that is one of his greatest strengths and contributions. He has an ability to hear your good qualities even if you give a bad audition, and to hear you in one role and east you imaginatively in another. He is still doing that with a younger generation of singers today. And it is only someone with his courage who could weather the storm of protest that arose over the Chereau 'Ring.' I think he's the only opera administrator in the world who would back a venture like that against all the odds.

"It is the most exciting thing I have ever been in, and it had the sort of effect on the audience that I think any performance of the 'Ring' should have. In the first year, we had three-quarters of an hour booing at the end, but in subsequent years people came to realize just how good it was.

The role of Wotan is the guts of the 'Ring' because it personi-fies the conflict between the power of love and the power of force - in a political sense. You can take that problem to whatever situation you like: How do you organize yourself and how do you act in your dealings with the world? As a member of the cast, it is not your job to provide the solution. You are there to present the problem and get the audience to think deeply on the subject. We all like to avoid the issue. But Wagner confronts you with it that's why so many people run away from his music and the feelings it expresses." McIntyre thinks of himself as a bass; 10 years ago, he tried the title role of Verdi's "Macbeth" and found it suited his voice and temperament until the final aria, bought south of London.

which proved too high. Telra-mund in Wagner's "Lohengrin" is his limit now, and even there he says his effectiveness in the role's higher reaches depends to a large degree on the conductor's control of phrasing, tempo and orchestral dynamics

Nevertheless, McIntyre reck-ons he has his voice better under control now than at any point in his career. To maintain his Heldenbariton repertoire, he realizes he has to stay fit, taking the example of singers like Birgit Nils-son and Hans Hotter, who con-tinued their careers well into their 60s because they had the physical strength to carry them through. McIntyre works in the garden, plays tennis and chops down trees. He will move soon with his wife and three daughters to a 100acre (40-hectare) farm they have

He would like to produce an opera, to teach, and to add Mussorgsky's "Boris Godunov" and perhaps one or two other roles to his repertoire. His next major challenge is the role of Rocco, which he sings for the first time at Marseille this season. He has always sung Pizarro in "Fidelio"; what attracts him to the bass part of Rocco - as with Macbeth, Wotan and the title role of Hindemith's "Cardillac" — is the character's two opposing sides. "Pizarro is all black, Leonore all white. Rocco is the only character who is two-sided. Like some of the Wagnerian characters Pm associated with, he has a dilemma. That is what makes him in-

'Mac' Sinatra Is Back

Sinstra sang loud and clear that "Mac is back in town" before a sell-out casino andience in his home state. At the show's start, the audience chuckled when Sinatra asked, "Where have you been?" but the singer said little else to the 550 people who paid $50 a ticket to see him. His biggest evation of the eve-ning came after the "Mac is back in town" line from "Mac the Knife." Sinatra, a Hoboken native, has an entertainment and advertising con-tract with the Golden Nugget company and has appeared at its Las Vegas casino during his self-im-posed absence from New Jersey. In August 1984. Sinatra vowed never again to perform in New Jersey after Casino Control Commissioner Joel Jacobson called him an "obnoxious bully" for demanding that a Golden Nugget blackjack dealer give him and Dean Martin cards from a hand-held deck. New Jersey law requires that dealers distribute cards from a plastic container. Martin and Sinatra apologized to casino officials, said they were un-aware of the law and offered to pay fines imposed on the casino employees involved in the incident.
